The Australian Mariners Welfare Society (AMWS) is a historic, not-for-profit charity established in the 1850s, dedicated to the welfare and support of mariners across Australia. With governance provided by a Board of 12 Councillors and a membership of around 100, AMWS plays a significant role in assisting seafarers, both directly and through key partnerships.

While AMWS does not provide comprehensive direct services, it does offer limited direct accommodation support to seafarers of moderate means, ensuring access to safe and affordable housing for those in need. Additionally, AMWS works closely with longstanding organizations, including the Mission to Seafarers and Stella Maris, offering financial support to enable these organizations to provide vital welfare services to mariners.

In addition to financial and accommodation support, AMWS invests in the professional and personal growth of the maritime community by providing educational scholarships at the Australian Maritime College and offering sail training opportunities through partnerships. These initiatives include experiences on the STS Young Endeavour and other tall ships, giving young Australians hands-on seamanship skills.

As a member of the Australian Seafarers Welfare Council, AMWS collaborates nationally to improve welfare standards and advocate for the well-being of seafarers. Membership in AMWS is open to those who share a commitment to supporting mariners and the organization's mission. By joining, members become part of a legacy organization dedicated to the welfare, education, and advancement of Australia's seafaring community.
